

Carson Walliser Candidate Profile

I love my department. After working on my departmental and faculty student government, I found that many departments, like my own, were being overlooked for ones with larger populations or ones that bring in higher revenue. I respect these departments, but each student should be valued regardless of faculty. I care about this school on a large scale. We all want to go to a school that we are proud of, and where we can see the effect of our work out in the world. The comment I've heard the most is that URSU doesn't care, and I am here to tell you because our students are worth caring about. My biggest goal is to fix the disconnect between the students and URSU, re-establishing the relationship that should be there between people and their government. I think we can bridge that gap by making all our students, women in particular, feel safer and at home on campus. Beginning with Welcome Week, I hope to make campus life more inclusive for people who have been discouraged by the types of activities on campus that are geared towards one particular type of personality. We need to communicate the opportunities and the power students have within the school. My goals are about empowering the students because by empowering them we create a stronger government, and a stronger school.
