

Catherine is a third-year student of International Studies, with concentration on International Affairs and working towards her Anthropology minor. Whether she's participating as an audience member or event organizer, she enjoys contributing to continued improvement of student experience at the University of Regina. As a member of various organizations, like RPIRG* and UR POLIS, she has been passionate about matters relating to student experience; student advocacy; and student representation on campus. Recently, this passion is emphasized through a Cannabis Legislation forum she co-organized on behalf of UR POLIS. The forum raises important questions that can affect students and non-students on campus.

On the other hand, her work with RPIRG has helped her learn how to connect with other students through events and advocacy initiatives that RPIRG started or partnered with.

If elected, Catherine wishes to continue the good work that Shawn Wiskar has started. Moreover, she has one main goal: not become a politician, but rather be a community leader.

On her spare time, Catherine loves to attend different events hosted by student clubs; learning about different cultures; and eating large fries from McDonalds.
